A New Variegated Azalea, GEORGE LINDLEY TABER

SEVERAL years ago we discovered this fine sort growing as a limb sport on one plant of the well-known lavender Omurasaki. It is interesting to note that Omurasaki has an impressive record of usefulness from the earliest days of Azalea history, having been repeatedly utilized as a stock in hybridization work.

We have kept a close check on the behavior of plants grown from the original wood, to make sure that they would carry on the noteworthy characteristics which first attracted our attention. Their blooming and general performance record has been exceptional and we have named the variety for our founder, the late George Lindley Taber.

A rapid grower, the Taber approaches Formosa in thrifty habit and its blooms are only slightly smaller. A faint fragrance makes it doubly attractive to those who miss this attribute in many of the Azaleas.

Grouped with Formosa, Phoenicea, or any of the lavenders, the effect is what might be called a "blending contrast" and easily becomes the cynosure of all eyes. The George Lindley Taber Azalea is classed as a medium-late bloomer, opening in March at Glen Saint Mary.

We are the originators and only authorized vendors of the Taber; only here can you be sure of getting the true strain, backed by a guarantee respected since 1882.

Those who visit Bellingrath Gardens in Mobile or Cypress Gardens in Winter Haven, Florida, this winter, may see artistic plantings of the Taber Azaleas in bloom at either showplace. And of course our display garden at Glen Saint Mary contains the largest collection anywhere.

ORDER EARLY Let us have your order right away if possible, so we may make shipment at the proper time—preferably just before blooming begins.

FOUR AZALEAS YOU SHOULD HAVE

AZALEA, APPLE-BLOSSOM. We like this one because its heavy crop of flowers much resembles apple-blossoms in coloring. It is one of the hardier varieties, of compact habit, midseason, with fine glossy green foliage. Really an exquisite Kurume destined for great popularity. Like most of the other Kurumes, it is a slow grower and therefore suitable for small areas.

| 6 to 8 in. . . $0 50 | 12 to 18 in. . . $1 40 |
| 8 to 10 in. . . 75 | 18 to 24 in. . . 2 00 |
| 10 to 12 in. . 1 00 | |

AZALEA, SNOW. A beautiful pure white Kurume that, at the height of its blooming season (February), looks like a snowbank. The foliage is dark green and the plants are compact and shapely. This is probably the most dependable and most popular white of its type for use in the South.

| 10 to 12 in. . 1 00 | |

AZALEA, NEW FLAME. For all who enjoy brilliant splashes of color in the landscape, this fine, upright-growing Indica is highly recommended. It blooms here fairly late in a brilliant flame shade of striking beauty. A particularly valuable variety for low screens and hedging.

AZALEA, WILLIAM BULL. While not new, this late-blooming, double-flowered, rosy salmon is distinct enough to attract much attention. Flowers are quite bright when first open and look like tiny roses borne profusely on long, loose stems. A most interesting Azalea for special places, such as reflecting pools and for planting against high walls. The William Bull is hardy and flowers over a long period.
